WEBSITE AUDIT

Shilpa K's Pilates Studio

Conversion, UX, content, credibility & local SEO review

Current website assessment	5.5 / 10
Primary issue	The website communicates the services, but it does not communicate enough why a customer should choose Shilpa.

The goal of this audit is not simply to make the website look better. The opportunity is to turn it into a stronger trust-building and trial-booking system.

Website reviewed: shilpakanodia.com
Prepared as a practical improvement roadmap for the next website iteration.

01 — Executive Summary

The current website has a solid foundation: the services are understandable, the target audience is visible, and there are clear ways to contact the studio. The main weakness is not a lack of information — it is how that information is packaged and converted into trust.

At present, much of the copy feels interchangeable with other wellness/Pilates websites. The site describes benefits such as strength, confidence, flexibility and wellness, but gives the visitor relatively few reasons to believe that Shilpa specifically is the right coach.

The result is a website that informs a visitor, but does not consistently move them through the sequence: “This is for me → I trust her → I understand the experience → I see proof → I want to book.”

The recommended revamp should therefore focus on positioning, proof, class experience, clearer pricing, stronger local SEO, better service pages and one consistent booking journey.

Current Site Scorecard

Area	Score	Observation
First impression	6/10	Clear, but not distinctive enough
Brand personality	5/10	Feels generic rather than strongly personal
Conversion journey	5/10	Too much friction and CTA variation
Trust & credibility	5/10	Needs stronger proof and credentials
Service presentation	6/10	Services are listed but not deeply sold
Local SEO foundation	7/10	Good location intent; more depth possible
Content / authority	4/10	Little educational content
Premium positioning	5/10	Does not fully communicate a premium studio

02 — Hero Section

Problem: The headline “Transform Your Body & Confidence with Pilates & Face Yoga” is clear but highly generic. It could belong to almost any Pilates/wellness studio.

Recommended fix: Replace generic wellness language with a sharper value proposition: who the studio is for, what makes the experience different, where it is, and one clear primary CTA.

03 — Too Little Shilpa

Problem: The business is built around a coach, but the site does not make Shilpa’s story, methodology, qualifications and personality feel central enough. The “Meet Shilpa” section reads like a generic bio.

Recommended fix: Make the coach the differentiator: certifications, experience, philosophy, specialisations, teaching approach, real photographs and a stronger personal story.

04 — AI / Template-Like Copy

Problem: Repeated phrases such as “stronger,” “more confident,” “natural glow,” “improve posture,” and “feel your best” are broad wellness phrases. They do not create a distinctive brand voice.

Recommended fix: Rewrite the copy around real customer situations, real class experiences and Shilpa’s actual approach. Human-first writing, SEO second.

05 — Audience Section

Problem: The site tries to address beginners, working professionals, moms, pregnant women, people with pain, people who dislike gyms and people seeking face yoga. The targeting becomes broad rather than specific.

Recommended fix: Prioritise 3–4 core customer types and write directly to their needs, fears and desired outcomes.

06 — Plans & Pricing

Problem: A section is labelled “Plans & Pricing”, but visitors are shown plan names without actual prices. This creates unnecessary friction and can make the section feel incomplete.

Recommended fix: Show clear pricing where appropriate, or rename the section and clearly explain how pricing/trials work. Remove ambiguity.

07 — CTA Inconsistency

Problem: The website uses several variations: Book a Trial, Book Your Trial, Book Trial, Check Availability, Chat Now, WhatsApp Now, etc. Multiple labels dilute the primary action.

Recommended fix: Use one primary CTA throughout: BOOK A TRIAL. Keep WhatsApp as the secondary action.

08 — Testimonials

Problem: The testimonial section says “Real Results from Real Clients,” but the proof is weak without stronger identity, photos, review context or links. Polished anonymous testimonials can feel AI-generated even when genuine.

Recommended fix: Use real client names where permitted, photos, Google review excerpts/screenshots, dates and specific experiences. Keep wording natural.

09 — Weak Social Proof

Problem: There is not enough visible evidence of demand or trust: ratings, review count, client stories, credentials, results and real class moments should be more prominent.

Recommended fix: Build a trust stack: Google rating, review count, certifications, client stories, studio photos and authentic class photography.

10 — Gallery

Problem: The gallery communicates that the studio has equipment and a physical space, but it does not sell the experience strongly enough.

Recommended fix: Show people: Shilpa coaching, small groups, real movement, client interaction, atmosphere, prenatal sessions and close-up details.

11 — Class Experience

Problem: A new visitor cannot quickly understand what their first session actually looks like. This is especially important for beginners who may feel intimidated.

Recommended fix: Add a “Your First Session” 3–4 step section explaining what happens before, during and after the class.

12 — Rehab & Prenatal

Problem: Rehab Pilates and Prenatal Pilates are high-trust services, but they are compressed into short sections. These customers have more questions and need more reassurance.

Recommended fix: Create dedicated service pages with FAQs, credentials, suitability, process, safety notes and strong booking CTAs.

13 — Missing FAQ

Problem: Common objections are left for WhatsApp: what to wear, beginner suitability, session duration, class size, trial details, location, pricing, prenatal questions and more.

Recommended fix: Add a concise FAQ section and service-specific FAQs to reduce pre-booking friction.

14 — Location / Local SEO

Problem: Goregaon, Malad and Kandivali are mentioned, but the website could do much more to convert local intent.

Recommended fix: Build dedicated local/service landing pages, improve location details, add map/landmark information and strengthen local structured content.

15 — No Content Engine

Problem: There is little visible educational content to capture people searching for Pilates, posture, back pain, prenatal movement, face yoga and related questions.

Recommended fix: Launch an SEO-focused blog/resource section and connect every article to a relevant trial or consultation CTA.

16 — Visual Storytelling

Problem: The page reads as a sequence of information blocks rather than a brand story. The visitor is told what the studio offers rather than shown what it feels like to be there.

Recommended fix: Rebuild the page narrative around: customer problem → Shilpa → method → experience → proof → plans → booking.

17 — Premium Positioning

Problem: The combination of personal training, semi-private sessions, rehab, prenatal and face yoga can support a premium position, but the current presentation feels closer to a generic local fitness website.

Recommended fix: Use calmer visual hierarchy, stronger photography, concise copy, real proof and a more editorial wellness aesthetic.

18 — Footer

Problem: The footer primarily closes the page rather than functioning as a final navigation and trust layer.

Recommended fix: Add service links, locations, contact details, hours, Instagram, FAQs, legal links and a final booking CTA.

19 — Recommended Conversion Journey

The new website should be structured around a simple psychological sequence instead of simply stacking sections.

01	RECOGNITION	“This is for someone like me.”
02	DIFFERENTIATION	“I understand why Shilpa is different.”
03	EXPERIENCE	“I know what my first session will be like.”
04	PROOF	“Other people trust her and got value.”
05	CHOICE	“I understand the plans/services.”
06	ACTION	“Booking a trial is easy.”

Recommended navigation

Home · Pilates · Rehab Pilates · Prenatal Pilates · Face Yoga · About Shilpa · Pricing · Testimonials · Blog · Contact

Primary CTA: BOOK A TRIAL Secondary CTA: WHATSAPP

20 — Priority Roadmap

Priority	What to change
P0 — Critical	Hero rewrite; clear positioning; one CTA system; pricing clarity; stronger Shilpa section; testimonials/proof; mobile booking flow.
P1 — High impact	Dedicated service pages; first-session journey; FAQ; authentic photography; stronger local SEO structure; better navigation.
P2 — Growth	Blog/SEO content system; Google review integration; local landing pages; lead tracking; WhatsApp follow-up flow.
P3 — Optimisation	A/B test hero and CTA copy; monitor enquiries; refine pages based on booking behaviour; continuously improve SEO content.

What the revamp should achieve

Current: Visitor reads → understands services → has to decide whether to trust → may WhatsApp.

Target: Visitor recognises themselves → understands Shilpa’s difference → sees proof → understands the experience → chooses a plan → books a trial.

> The opportunity is therefore bigger than a visual redesign. The website should become a local lead-generation and trust-building asset for the studio.
